He would vote for this bill, regretting that it is no better, and legislation he did not complain, nor did he wonder at the present exhibition of obstructive tactics made by the Democrats of the House. The school in which the Democratic party was trained was the school of obstruction. It was totally sentiment, to project any new ideas of policy, or to carry into actual execution any affirmative policy it might advocate before the people. While the country has been going forward with rapid strides, the Democratic party has stood holding onto the coat tails of progress. The gentleman from Tennessee, Mr. Mc-Millan, said that no matter what the country wanted, it must look to the Democratic side assistance. Send for the Republican members if something was needed here. Do not depend on the Democratic party for it is incapable of morally, politically and in every other way doing anything but hold on: The attempted fraud practiced upon the country by the Democratic talk about farm mortgages, became a laughing matter when a man spoke earnestly upon the matter. Continuing, Mr. Grosvenor extolled the present code of rules. The Democrats never repeal or materially modify this code. They would camp to-morrow night where the Republicans camped last night, and say they were always in favor of this code. [Laughter] Mr. Grosvenor reviewed the legislation enacted by the Republicans in the present Congress, and then proceede criticise the Democrats for their obstructive tactics. Let them be continued. Let them keep it up. Let them abuse their constitutional privilege to order roll calls, but let it be understood that the American people knew what they were doing and why they were doing it. The House then went into the committee of the whole on the land grant forfeiture bill.

Mr. McAdoo, of New York, spoke of the efforts of the Democratic Houses to forfeiture the unearned land grants and of the steady opposition of the Senate to those efforts. Now both Houses being in the control of the Republicans, compromise has been patched up. The pending measure might well be entitled a "bill to compound a felony with the railroads which have stoken lands." Pending further discussion the com-mittee rose and the House adjourned.

The Bill Ceding Heligoland Pas Second Reading.

Lords this evening Lord Salisbury moved a second reading of the bill providing for the cession of Heligoland to Germany. He generally belittled the importance of it to England, and magnified the advantages to be derived from its transfer. Referring to the African clause in the Anglo-German agreement, he argued that as long as it was in the hands of another power, English interests to the northward could not be interfered with. Under the convention there was not the slightest chance for such interference until the confines of Europe would be reached. He urged that an exclusive English protectorate over Zanzibar would assist in the sup-pression of the slave trade and develop ommerce for England and India. There was no reason, he said, to appre-hend any difficuly over the convention
